INTRODUCTION

This booklet has been prepared for the use of those providing direct supervision of clients. It is also for the use of the Parole Board, judges, and attorneys as a guide in recommending an appropriate client management strategy. The Department is committed to preparing clients to live civil, sober and productive lives. The goal is to ensure an opportunity for positive personal progress within the least restrictive environment. By outlining specific client management strategies, eligibility criteria and the referral process where applicable, it is our hope a client's needs will be more adequately assessed and met.

Change is constant in the area of client management strategies. This booklet has been revised and amended as a result of changes in the area of supervision levels and client management strategies. This booklet is provided as a guide and is accurate to the date of print. Applicable policy and procedure should be referred to for further information and clarification.

Revisions of this booklet will be made available as needed. If you have any questions, please contact your local Probation and Parole Office.

I. COURT CONTROLLED CASES

LEVELS OF SUPERVISION:

When the Court assigns a client to the supervision of the Division of Probation and Parole, an Initial Assessment is conducted. The Initial Assessment Phase lasts 90 days. During this period, the client is assessed for criminogenic needs, related factors and receives information relative to the expectations of supervision. An assessment tool called the Field Risk Reduction Instrument is used to calculate the intervention level and predict potential benefit of community supervision strategies and community treatment. Each case assigned for supervision is managed at one of three levels. These levels include Level III, Level II and Level I. The supervising officer continually assesses the risk and needs of the client to determine the appropriate level of supervision. Through on-going assessment, the probation and parole officer ensures problem areas are addressed and the client processes through the system without undue risk to the community. For probationers, terms of probation range from a minimum of six months to a maximum of five years. There are a full range of community resources utilized to address probationers' needs.

All officer initiated supervision contacts are to be purpose driven and conducted on a schedule that enhances the likelihood of the successful completion of required activities, with minimal negative impact on the client's existing pro-social activities. Contacts will be dictated by the supervision plan and in some cases may exceed minimum contact requirements.

SUPERVISION STRATEGIES:

There are a variety of supervision strategies within the Department of Corrections for clients under Court jurisdiction. Based on local practice and/or availability, the Court should consider the level of risk/need the client presents, the type of strategy described and the eligibility criteria.

II. BOARD CONTROLLED CASES

LEVELS OF SUPERVISION:

When the Board releases a client on parole or conditional release to the supervision of the Division of Probation and Parole, an Initial Assessment is conducted. This Initial Assessment Phase lasts 90 days. During this period, the client is assessed for criminogenic needs, related factors and receives information relative to the expectations of supervision. An assessment tool called the Field Risk Reduction Instrument is used to calculate the intervention level and predict potential benefit of community supervision strategies and community treatment. Each case assigned for supervision is managed at one of three levels. These levels include Level III, Level II and Level I. The supervising officer continually assesses the risk and needs of the client to determine the appropriate level of supervision. Through on-going assessment, the probation and parole officer ensures problem areas are addressed and the client processes through the system without undue risk to the community.

All officer initiated supervision contacts are to be purpose driven and conducted on a schedule that enhances the likelihood of the successful completion of required activities, with minimal negative impact on the client's existing pro-social activities. Contacts will be dictated by the supervision plan and in some cases may exceed minimum contact requirements.

SUPERVISION STRATEGIES:

There are a variety of supervision strategies within the Department of Corrections for clients under Board jurisdiction. Based on local practice and/or availability, the Board considers the level of risk/need the client presents, the type of strategy described and the eligibility criteria.
